MISSIONS

Mission 3026-01: Pull!
North of Shaw River, Barlow's End, Federated Suns
September 25, 3026
Pilot Skill: 4-5

Okay boys, listen up! Due to our bang-up job with his wayward Duke last year, the first prince of the Federated Suns has given us a contract to help defend their world of Barlow's End in the Draconis March. This is a bit of a mixed blessing, I'm afraid. I mean, technically, Barlow's end is a great posting – instead of a backwater it's a world on the Fed Suns' border with their worst enemy. Of course, while it's a plumb posting, that also means that it's a dangerous posting. I mean, sure, officially the third succession war ended some time last year, but in practice there's pretty much as much fighting going on now as there was during the war. And pretty much all of that fighting is of the form of cross-border raids onto worlds like this one. To make matters worse, it turns out that his Royal Highness is in the middle of some kind of military exercise called "Operation Galahad". Because of that, he's feeling a little thin on some of his Combine border worlds. So we're here, along with elements of the Eridani Light Horse and a mercenary unit called "The White Witches".

Our job here is to defend a C&C facility that covers a good chunk of the continent of Landova. And I'm afraid it looks like we're going to earn our pay pretty quick. We've been here less than a week and the Combine has already launched an attack. Unfortunately for us, the feds are putting up one hell of a fight in the skies, which makes the C&C facility a huge target. Fortunately for us, the Feds are doing such a bang-up job that the bad guys were forced to attempt a hot drop. I'm afraid that this means that this fight is going to be chaos, with Combine 'mechs dropping all over the place. Watch each other's backs, and keep those guys off of the facility.

Map: This is a mostly wilderness map. Add a multi-hex (2x4 rectangular or 7 hex hexagonal) building at the end of the road as shown to serve as the Communications Center, and a single hex radar dish in hex 0313 of grassland 3 (Lower left as shown, reversed from the rest of the maps).

The Communications Center is one level tall. The Radar dish is four levels above the terrain. Both have variable CF, depending on the BV of the heroes (See BV band notes)

Note that shots that hit the legs of targets with partial cover behind the building will hit (and damage) the building instead.

Recommended Maps:

- 1: Grasslands 1
- 2: Grasslands 2
- 3: Grasslands 3
- 4: Open Terrain 2

Setup: The PCs can set up anywhere they want on the map.

Special Rules

Which lever is the parachute? The incoming 'mechs are performing a hot drop onto the facility. However, they're somewhat scattered due to the Feds' aerospace defenders. Each odd numbered turn, a single OPFOR 'mech chosen randomly from the remaining OPFOR will appear on the map.

Here I come! The turn that a 'mech arrives on the map, it will be on track to land in a random position. Starting with the location of the radar dish, roll one die to determine which direction it will land in (using the "Facing after a fall" table, with an arbitrary hex determined as "Front"), plus two dice for the number of hexes away. If this would put the 'mech arriving off of the map, move it closer until it is on the map. If it would put the 'mech on top of a building, move it farther until it is no longer on a building. During the first turn the 'mech is visible, but too high up to participate in combat. Select the 'mechs starting position during its position in initiative.

Remember: It's not the fall that kills you... The following turn, during the movement phase, the 'mech can move up to its walk speed in any direction, as if it had jump jets (the 'mech is either using its own jump jets or disposable jump packs). At the end of its movement it will have landed. When it lands, it will have a movement target movement modifier as if it had jumped. However, it will also have the standard +3 attacker modifier. At the end of the movement phase it will have landed and be treated as a normal 'mech. It will not receive heat for this "jump". During that movement, the 'mech can attempt to perform a "Death from Above" attack, with the standard restrictions and penalties. If there is a 'mech under where it would land that hasn't moved yet, the falling 'mech must move to get out of the way

Additional Rewards

Take the Hit:

Hey! Why don't you pick on someone your own size!

After a Ranged combat target has been declared, but before any to-hit rolls are made, you may mark off a box to force the attacker to attack you instead, using all of the same weapons that he would have used to shoot the original target. You may only do this if you are at least as close as the original target and have a clear line of sight to the attacker. Once all three boxes have been marked off, cross out this reward.

Hey! Why don't you pick on someone your own size!

After a Ranged combat target has been declared, but before any to-hit rolls are made, you may mark off a box to force the attacker to attack you instead, using all of the same weapons that he would have used to shoot the original target. You may only do this if you are at least as close as the original target and have a clear line of sight to the attacker. Once all three boxes have been marked off, cross out this reward.

BATTLETECH™

MISSIONS

Mission: 3026-01 Debrief

Pull!

North of Shaw River, Barlow's End, Federated Suns

September 25, 3026

“Barlow's Beginning” is your typical ‘mechwarrior bar. It's fairly bright, not too dirty, and with a reasonably jovial atmosphere that remains that way so long as competing units don't find themselves present at the same time. For a change, the beer is actually pretty cheap – which it turns out is due to the fact that the regulars here are actually Fed Suns regulars who don't get paid as well as mercs do.

The owner and primary bartender at “Barlow's Beginning” is a tall man named Aidan who has the look of a former military man who's let himself go a bit after his retirement. At first he's pretty wary around mercs, but he warms up quickly enough.

“You know,” he says after you order your second round, “Normally I don't wind up serving a lot of mercs. I mean, sure, the Light Horse has been here for a few months, but this particular facility is usually manned by AFFS troops.” A few more beers, and you manage to learn that it turns out they're off planet for some military exercises that the High Prince is running, called “Operation Galahad”.

It seems like the Prince is up to something. When you took this contract, you were instructed to be pretty quiet about it. You're not the only merc unit on world – the biggest being the Eridani Light Horse, but there are several other small units as well. Add to that the fact that you've barely been on-planet for a month and you're already under attack, and things are looking pretty suspicious. Still, the pay is good, and the beers at the ‘mechwarrior bar are cheap, so you're not really complaining.

“You know”, Aidan says after you order your third round, “It sounds like you boys are in for a bit of fun. Those ‘mechs that you fought today, those sound like Wolf's Dragoons. They're the only unit in the ‘sphere still running a bunch of those designs. If you had to ask me, I'd guess they'd found a cache of old Star League stuff, or maybe even some of Amaris' leavings.”

The idea of fighting the Dragoons turns the stomachs of even the bravest (or dumbest) ‘mechwarriors out there. In many ways they've been the definition of elite mechwarriors since they burst on the scene in the early 3000s. Some even say that they “arrived” from beyond the periphery, but honestly, that's pretty unlikely. Most people seem to agree with Aidan – that they just stumbled across some old gear lying around, but there's no denying that they're good.

Still, if they're here on Barlow's End, then it's likely that their current employer, the Draconis Combine, is really committed to this raid. Looks like Aidan is right – things are about to get really interesting here. Well, you suppose that's why they pay you the big C-Bills...

Take the Hit:

Hey! Why don't you pick on someone your own size!

After a Ranged combat target has been declared, but before any to-hit rolls are made, you may mark off a box to force the attacker to attack you instead, using all of the same weapons that he would have used to shoot the original target. You may only do this if you are at least as close as the original target and have a clear line of sight to the attacker. Once all three boxes have been marked off, cross out this reward.

Mission: 3026-01 Debrief

Pull!

North of Shaw River, Barlow's End, Federated Suns

September 25, 3026

“Barlow's Beginning” is your typical ‘mechwarrior bar. It's fairly bright, not too dirty, and with a reasonably jovial atmosphere that remains that way so long as competing units don't find themselves present at the same time. For a change, the beer is actually pretty cheap – which it turns out is due to the fact that the regulars here are actually Fed Suns regulars who don't get paid as well as mercs do.

The owner and primary bartender at “Barlow's Beginning” is a tall man named Aidan who has the look of a former military man who's let himself go a bit after his retirement. At first he's pretty wary around mercs, but he warms up quickly enough.

“You know,” he says after you order your second round, “Normally I don't wind up serving a lot of mercs. I mean, sure, the Light Horse has been here for a few months, but this particular facility is usually manned by AFFS troops.” A few more beers, and you manage to learn that it turns out they're off planet for some military exercises that the High Prince is running, called “Operation Galahad”.

It seems like the Prince is up to something. When you took this contract, you were instructed to be pretty quiet about it. You're not the only merc unit on world – the biggest being the Eridani Light Horse, but there are several other small units as well. Add to that the fact that you've barely been on-planet for a month and you're already under attack, and things are looking pretty suspicious. Still, the pay is good, and the beers at the ‘mechwarrior bar are cheap, so you're not really complaining.

“You know”, Aidan says after you order your third round, “It sounds like you boys are in for a bit of fun. Those ‘mechs that you fought today, those sound like Wolf's Dragoons. They're the only unit in the ‘sphere still running a bunch of those designs. If you had to ask me, I'd guess they'd found a cache of old Star League stuff, or maybe even some of Amaris' leavings.”

The idea of fighting the Dragoons turns the stomachs of even the bravest (or dumbest) ‘mechwarriors out there. In many ways they've been the definition of elite mechwarriors since they burst on the scene in the early 3000s. Some even say that they “arrived” from beyond the periphery, but honestly, that's pretty unlikely. Most people seem to agree with Aidan – that they just stumbled across some old gear lying around, but there's no denying that they're good.

Still, if they're here on Barlow's End, then it's likely that their current employer, the Draconis Combine, is really committed to this raid. Looks like Aidan is right – things are about to get really interesting here. Well, you suppose that's why they pay you the big C-Bills...
